Introduction
The Discussions Section allows you and your students to post messages and engage in conversations beyond the classroom. Discussion boards are suitable for dialogues about all class-related activities, including lectures and assigned readings.

Getting started
In the Settings section of your course Web site, enable the Discussions section. Please note that there are two navigation options: “Single screen” displays discussion topics as a list, and “Split screen” uses HTML frames. This document features step-by-step instructions and screenshots for the “Split screen” option.

After enabling the Discussions section, CourseWorks creates a default category called “General Discussion.” You may want to use this category to provide background information for the course or to outline your expectations for student participation. The next few steps will describe how to manage your discussion categories.

Managing your discussions
Discussions are arranged hierarchically. Categories, created by faculty, instructors, or TAs, are “containers” for topics, or subcategories, which hold messages.

For example, you might create a category for broad themes (e.g., "Battles of World War I") presented during a semester. Within this category, you would create topics for material covered in specific lectures (e.g., “The Battle of Verdun”). When students post messages, their replies are “threaded” in chronological order.

Creating a new category:
Use the right-hand pull-down menu to select “New Category” (Fig. 2). In the adjacent frame, enter a title for the new category.

When you click “Create Category,” you will be prompted to create a new topic. See the next page for instructions on this step.
Creating a new topic:
Select “New Topic” from the pull-down menu (Fig. 2).

Enter the topic as subject and type the question or comment to which students should respond (Fig. 3). After clicking “Submit message,” you will see the topic as it appears in the discussion.

To participate, students select a discussion topic and reply to that message.

Replying to a message or topic:
To view a topic and its related messages, select the topic name.

You may respond to a message by clicking the “Reply” link. You may change the message subject line, if necessary -- your message will stay threaded in the discussion. Enter your response in the “Message Body” text box and click “Submit Message” when you have completed your reply.

The links next to each message allow you to reply to, edit, or delete each message individually.

By default, CourseWorks prevents students from editing or deleting messages once they have been submitted, but as the instructor, you may grant these privileges to the class in the “Set Student Options” section, which is available from the “Change View” pull-down menu.

Enabling student options
CourseWorks allows you to change the discussion board options for students. To make changes, select “Set Student Options” in the “Change View” pull-down menu (Fig. 2).

Please note that this feature affects privileges for all students enrolled in the class.
Establishing groups
If you have a large class, you may want to allow groups of students to work together on specific projects. CourseWorks allows you to divide your class into smaller groups.

In the Settings section for the course site, click the “Set Groups” button in the top navigation. To create a new group in which you determine members individually, select the first option, “Create New Group.”

Provide a name for the group and set members by checking the box next to each student’s name.

You may choose whether or not to monitor the group’s activities by selecting the “Faculty Permissions” option you prefer (See Fig. 7).

Portfolios
The Discussions section can also be used as portfolio space for each student. In the Settings section, click “Set Groups,” and then select “Create Student Portfolios.” When you provide a title and click “Create Portfolios,” CourseWorks will generate individual portfolios. Students can only access their own portfolios.

Editing or deleting student groups or portfolios
Please note that changes to a group’s roster or to delete a group or portfolio must done from the “Set Groups” section of the course Settings.
